Acknowledging that we live and work in the traditional territory of the Kwanlin Dün First Nation and the Ta'an Kwäch'än Council.

COURSE INVITATION

Through guided reflection, students are invited to analyze the ways they currently use communication, considering the contextual factors that impact professional relationships. Continuous analysis supports further development of their communication skills. Practice and feedback encourage students to become active, intentional and self-aware communicators. This course fosters a foundation for relational practice in northern workplaces.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS

Prerequisite(s): none

COURSE PROVOCATIONS

Collectively, these provocations guide your learning journey:

How might reflection and self-awareness strengthen relational practice?

How can communication theory strengthen communication competencies?

How does our understanding of place and culture influence communication?

DOCUMENTATIONS OF LEARNING

Throughout the course students respond to the course provocations and provide documentation to evidence their progress with the following identified competencies:

- Communication
- Self-Awareness
- Creative and Critical Thinking
- Reflective Practice

Evidence of progress will be documented through:

| Communication Reflection Logs       |
|-------------------------------------|
| Communication Skills Video Analysis |
| Communication Climate Project       |

To successfully pass this course, the student will need to obtain a pass valuation for each documentation of learning.

COURSE FORMAT

This course invites co-inquiry between students with the instructor both during and outside of class time. Both students and the instructor have a responsibility to engage with the learning process. Students can expect involvement in class, weekly readings, skill practice, and reflection to support their exploration of provocations and development of competencies. The amount of time spent on this course will vary among students and fluctuate throughout the term.
